

Case study

Procurement of medical supplies in a challenging environment

Location
Iraq

Situation

During the last several years, vital infrastructure and life-saving supplies were desperately needed in-country by numerous organisations. Due to complexities in delivering this type of specialised service, many medical procurement companies were unable to provide products or something tangible versus support (intangible).

Medekit quickly responded to these challenges by navigating legal registration obstacles to be able to provide specialised services and supplies in Iraq. After successfully applying for and being awarded the mandatory licences and permits necessary for the provision of operational support, Medekit developed and implemented a robust and reliable supply chain solution. By working with multiple agencies within the United Kingdom and Iraq, the systems needed to deliver medical supplies in-country were seamlessly implemented.

Outcome

- Medekit was able to provide a wide range of core medical supplies with a just-in-time delivery service through an established, reliable network of in-country suppliers
- By utilising Medekit's teams, processes and supply chain solutions, multiple clients in industries ranging from oil and gas, mine clearance, security and medical clinics and hospitals were kept fully operational during challenging times
